Good.co

Good&Co is an app and online tool that uses scientific psychological testing to match a person to a potential workplace. It gives both job seekers and companies insights to help them better understand themselves and their employees. This way, job searchers can find jobs that fit them as the people they are, and not just their skillset.

The algorithm was developed by Dr. Kerry Schofield, Good&Co's co-founder and Chief Psychometrician, and is based on "psychobiological frameworks of personality, rooted in neuroscience and behavioral genetics."

It's a completely new way of looking for a job, and we think it's definitely worth checking out.

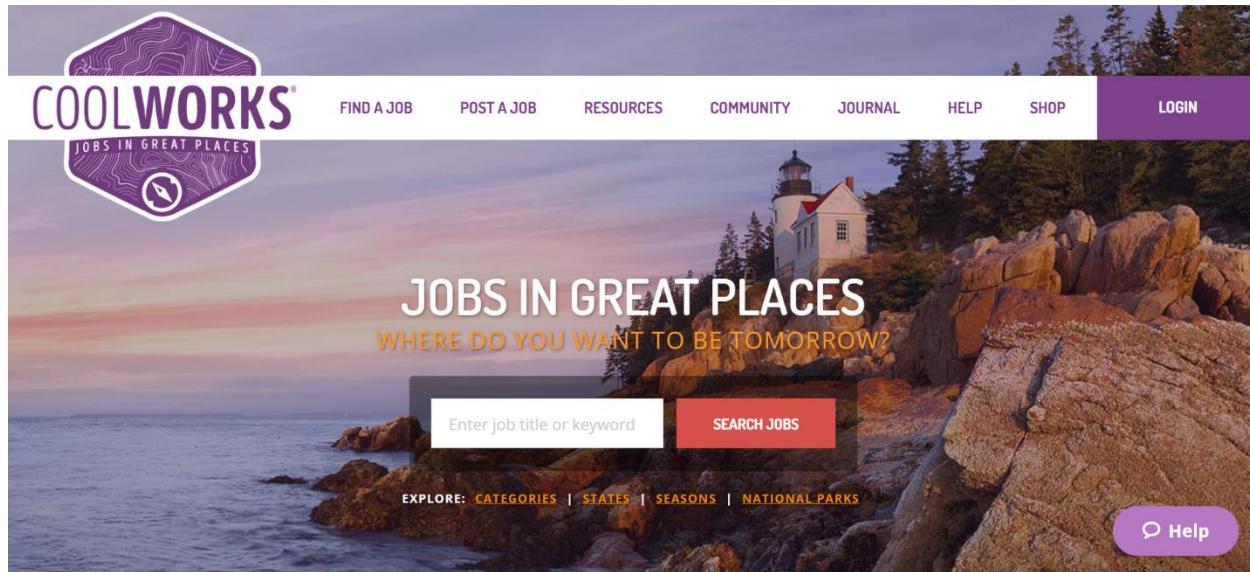

aftercollege.com

AfterCollege is another great AI-powered job search website for you to find entry-level jobs and internships.

The search engine helps you curate your job search by prompting you to enter the school you've studied at, your major, and graduation month and year. The AI tool will generate a list of jobs and internships that best fit you and your interests.

The website works with 25,000 companies and currently has over 400,000 job and internships listings.

Twitter.com

Twitter is another social media platform that can serve as a means for companies to advertise job openings. What is neat about finding job listings on Twitter is that you, as a job seeker, get to communicate directly with hiring managers and the brands themselves before submitting your resume. The whole job search process is quite relaxed, and you can find interesting job opportunities on the go.

Social media job searches let employers know you're in touch with technology and a forward-thinking employee. But if you're just getting started in the professional world, you need to consider sites designed for students and entry-level positions.

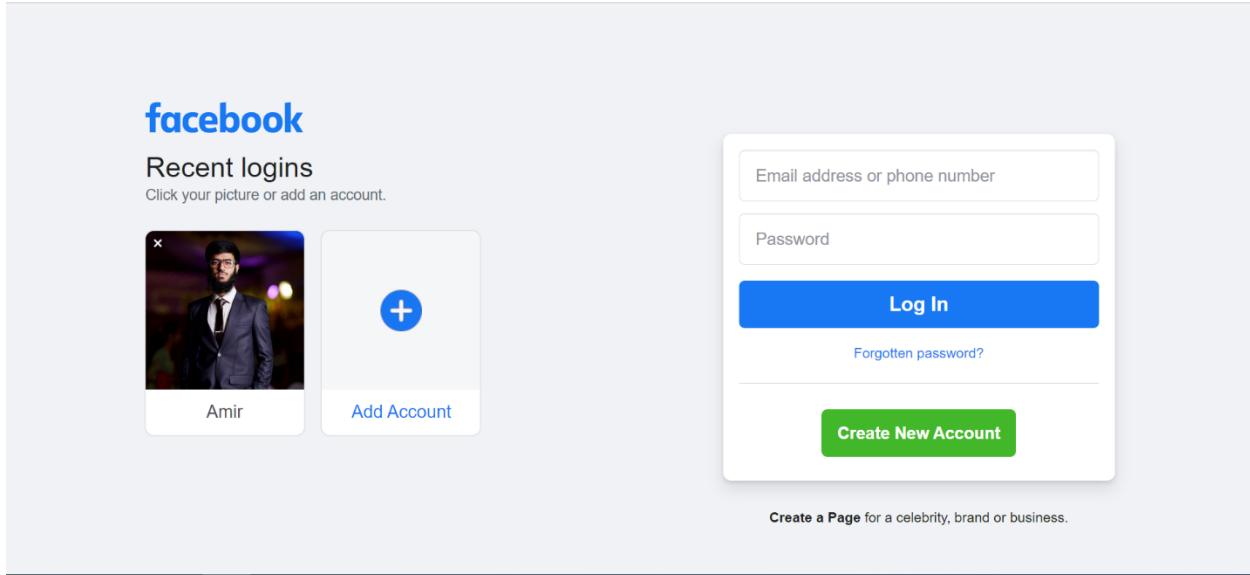

Instagram.com

Instagram is a popular social platform among nearly everyone, including brands and companies, and rightfully so. Having around 1.4 billion users, 70% of those users being under the age of 35, it is the perfect place for scouting talent and creating sponsored job listing stories and posts that job seekers can apply to.

Also, by being a photo and video sharing platform, it gives creatives a space to showcase their portfolio and be approached by brands for work.

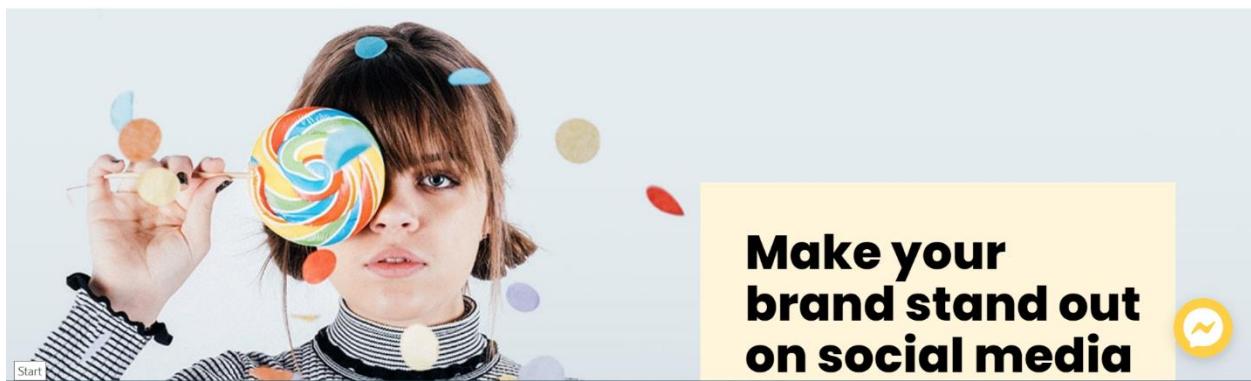

Of course, not only creatives benefit from being present on Instagram, as there are plenty of job opportunities in various fields posted every day that you can actively search for, or just stumble upon while scrolling through your feed.

Facebook.com

Facebook is yet another great place to search for jobs. Try looking up various groups that match your interests and the field you are trying to land a job in and get engaged.

Many people who are already working for a client or company post job listings on their behalf, so it's not only an excellent way to find opportunities, but you can also make connections and expand your professional network with like minded individuals working in your field.

Careerarc.com

There are tons of companies using TweetMyJobs.com CareerArc to get the word out about job openings acquire top talent today. The simplicity and viral nature of the platform combine to make it a powerful recruiting tools for businesses and job seekers savvy enough to use this medium in their searches.

What makes CareerArc unique is that it is the only social recruiting platform that provides brands with the social media reach, frequency, and scale they need to attract and hire top talent.

Craigslist.org

This site offers more than the ability to buy and sell things. It offers jobs categorized by specialty in large and not-so-large cities throughout the U.S. and around the world. With an Alexa ranking of 46 in the U.S., Craigslist.org is a high-traffic site that is popular with employers.

Any of these job search websites can work well for exploring the job market. However, it's a mistake to rely exclusively (or even primarily) on job boards. Make sure you are leveraging your network and the power of social media for the best results.

For Job Seekers | For Employers

Careerbuilder.com

Operating in 23 countries outside the U.S., CareerBuilder.com remains one of the best job search sites on the web today, connecting hundreds of thousands of employers with millions of job seekers.

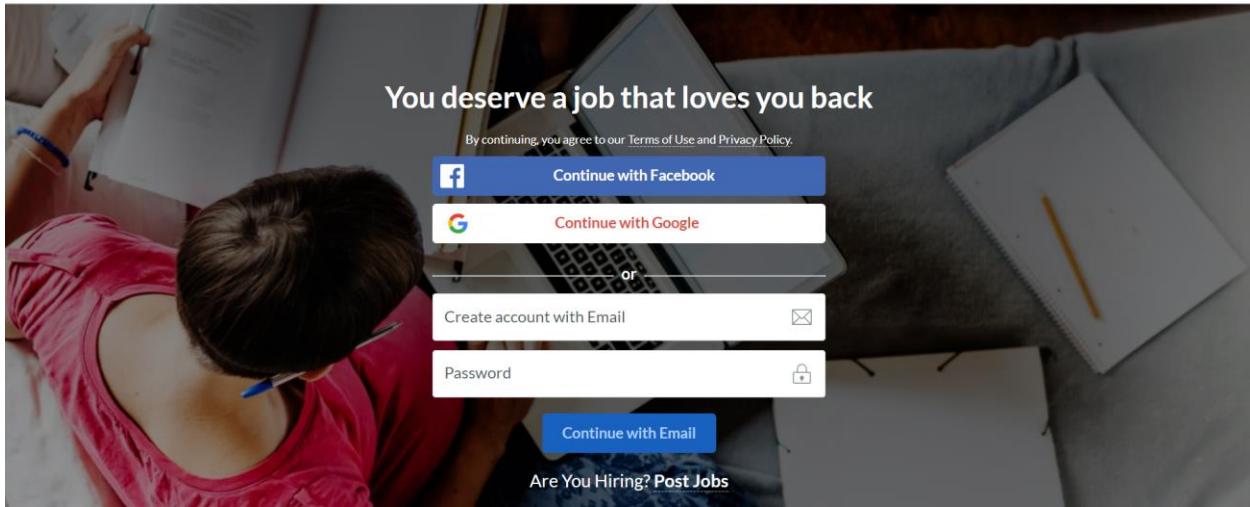

The platform allows users the opportunity to post their resumes and be approached by employers, as well as to conduct their own active job search and save those jobs and searches.

Monster.com

Monster.com “is a global leader in connecting people and jobs.” It is one of the most visited and recognized job search websites worldwide, offering almost half a million jobs to visitors at any given time. Monster.com has been around a long time and is worth checking out during your job search process.

Monster also has an app that allows users to leverage the power of Facebook connections to aid in their job searches. It works much like LinkedIn, using Monster and Facebook to accomplish the same connections.

Glassdoor.com

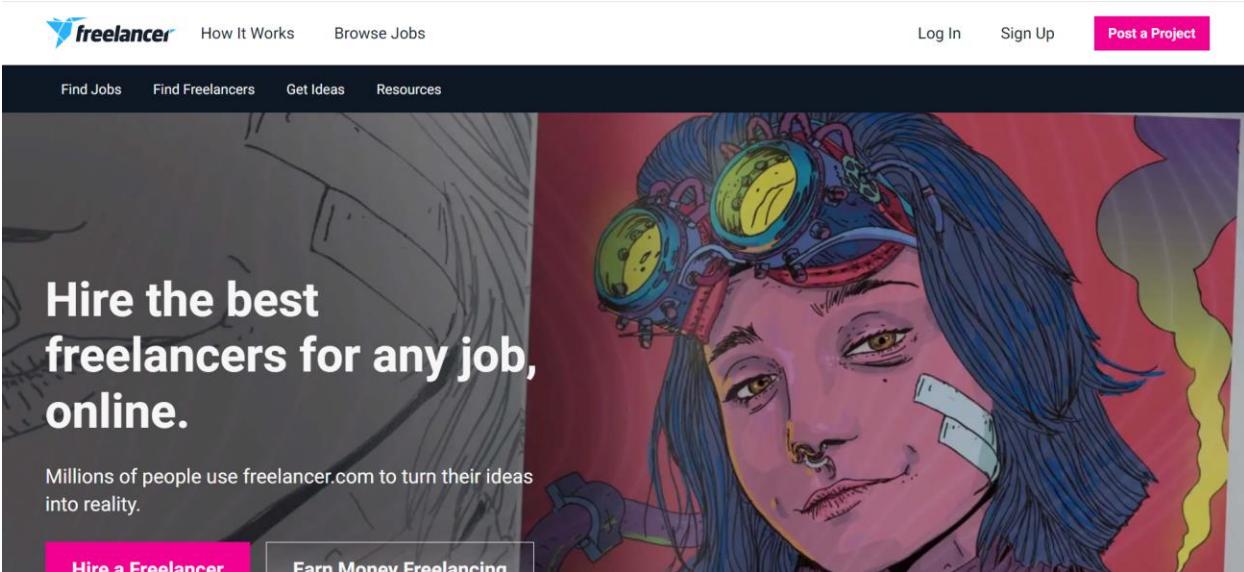

This website boasts an Alexa rank of 115 among U.S audiences. In addition to offering a job search feature with 11 million jobs posted so far, Glassdoor.com also offers salary information and has over 45 million company reviews from employees. Honestly, the company research feature alone makes Glassdoor.com worth a visit, and in some cases, it is probably even more useful than the actual job board.

The screenshot shows the Indeed.com homepage. At the top, there is a navigation bar with links for 'Find jobs' and 'Company reviews'. On the right side of the bar are links for 'Submit your CV', 'Sign in', and 'Employers / Post Job'. Below the navigation bar are two search input fields: 'What' (Job title, keywords, or company) and 'Where' (city, province, or region), both with magnifying glass icons. To the right of these fields is a blue 'Find jobs' button. Below the search fields, there are two promotional links: 'Post your CV - It only takes a few seconds' and 'Employers: Post a job - Your next hire is here'. Further down, there is a section titled 'Popular searches' featuring a grid of search terms: IT, Bank, Karachi, Lahore, Islamabad, Punjab, Engineer, Teaching, Peshawar, and Data Entry.

Indeed.com

Indeed.com is, hands down, the best job search engine in the world, with 10 jobs added every second. You read that right. The number of job ads they offer is certainly impressive, so it should come as no surprise that it is one of the most visited sites on the web today, receiving more than 250 million unique visitors each month.

What makes Indeed.com unique is that it behaves like a search engine for jobs, allowing you to widen or narrow your search until it's just right for you. If you're feeling overwhelmed with where to look, Indeed is an excellent place to start.

Freelancer.com

Just like Upwork, Freelancer is also one of the best job search sites out there for your freelance career. It is, in fact, the world's largest freelancing and crowdsourcing marketplace, connecting over 56 million employers and freelancers from almost 250 countries.

Once you sign up, you gain access to a colossal number of freelance job opportunities, as well as exposure to employers and potential clients. If freelancing is your passion, freelancer.com is one of the top sites for you to start building your career.

Anyone looking for freelance work, remote work, and part-time jobs will benefit from taking a look at the opportunities available on FlexJobs.com. This job search website provides researched opportunities, advice, and other benefits for members who have the option of paying monthly, quarterly, or annually for their memberships.

They also host events and webinars for job searchers on topics like salary negotiation, career advice, cover letter writing, and other useful skills.

Snagajob.com

One of the best job search sites out there for flexible working hours is SnagaJob.com. It is “America’s #1 hourly work marketplace,” and offers a wide range of jobs in various industries for hourly work, including seasonal, part-time, full-time jobs, as well as career opportunities for teens. SnagaJob.com has an Alexa rank of 4,505 as of November 2021.

SnagaJobs.com prides itself on making the application and recruitment process as easy as possible. All you need to do is create a free profile, which doubles as your resume and application, so you can easily apply to jobs or be scouted by employers.
